When Freedom Changed America

Tuesday, March 26, 6:30 pm

One hundred years separate the Emancipation Proclamation (1863) and the March on Washington (1963). Both movements were defined by the pursuit of freedom: one from the institution of slavery, the other from economic and political inequality. But what did freedom mean to Americans who participated in these important historical events? Presented by John Edgar Tidwell, African American and American Literature professor from the University of Kansas.
